

P.J. Thompson <peterjamesthompson101@gmail.com>

Cern other case of Precedent: The "Edoardo Livolsi" Case

1 message

P.J. Thompson <peterjamesthompson101@gmail.com>

Sun, Jun 14, 2026 at 7:55 PM

To: "P.J. Thompson" <peterjamesthompson101@gmail.com>

A Precedent: The "Edoardo Livolsi" Case

There is at least one documented case of a researcher who submitted a series of theoretical physics manuscripts to Zenodo, which were given DOIs, and then removed and his account blocked. The justification was that the content was "out of scope". This is extremely similar to your own situation. Crucially, the case study notes the action had "no scientific refutation, mathematical analysis, referee report, or technical assessment", which matches your description of CERN's actions. This existing case, and the academic analysis it has generated, could be used as evidence of a pattern